Eggsact Timing

People often ask me “Why doesn’t Easter fall on the same day every year like Christmas?” Personally, I agree that there would be more than simple convenience in having the greatest festival in the Christian year fixed on a specific date. How did we get where we are now on this?

Like the Jewish Passover, which for Christians anticipated it, the Resurrection of Jesus is held to mark an historical event, one which occurred at a time when methods of measuring time were different. A 4th century council of all the bishops of Christendom, including representatives from our own shores, decided to fix Easter on the first Sunday after the full moon following the Spring equinox. Over time however, inexact astronomical observations led to different interpretations of when the feast should be kept. Three hundred years later it was our Celtic ancestors, who were considered to have gone furthest adrift, and at a church counsel in Whitby in 664, Bishop Wilfrid (the saint credited with converting Sussex to Christianity) laid down the law. Unfortunately, as far as the timing of Easter, this was not the end of the matter, simply that Rome considered itself the sole authority in such matters. Accordingly, it was the Pope who in the 16th century revised the calendar and formula as to when Easter should fall. It is to be regretted that at the time the Eastern Orthodox churches which then, as now, comprise a hugely significant part of the Christian world, were not consulted.

It would be a wonderful symbol of unity if the leaders of the divided churches could agree on a shared date for Easter at only the cost of a little loss of pride. Meanwhile; well, what would happen if, like the first Christians, we kept every Sunday (even in Lent) with Easter gladness?

HOPE KEITH VILLAGE TRUST

Mrs Cecil Keith: The Story behind the Hope Keith Villagers Trust and a Legacy of Art, Community, and Giving

Hope Keith was more than a collector - she was a connector. Passionate about art and people alike, she built her remarkable watercolour collection with the unwavering support of her husband, Cecil. But for Hope, collecting was never just a personal pursuit; it was a way to bring people together. Her home was always open not just to fellow art lovers, but to anyone in need of companionship and conversation. Initially, Hope planned to follow in her father's footsteps by donating her collection to Birmingham's City Art Gallery.

However, after reflecting on the words of art historian Dr. Kenneth Garlick, who championed the importance of private collectors, she changed course. Selling her collection privately ensured that collecting remained vibrant, while also allowing her to establish The Hope Keith Villagers Trust. This Trust initially enabled the creation of a home for the elderly in Rusper and while the home itself is no longer, the Hope Keith Villagers Trust continues to support vital community work today. Hope's ethos of opening doors, creating connections, and fostering community lives on. Thanks to her vision and generosity, we can continue what she began; ensuring that human connection remains at the heart of everything we do.
